That's exactly how Rotonda Golf & Country Club's three courses were planned. The Hills, The Palms, Long Marsh and The Links. Four emeralds in a spectacular setting bathed by gulf breezes. Challenging, well maintained fairways that provide a new golfing experience with every round.

It all began in 1972 when the Hills, with its clever water hazards and elevated greens, opened to rave reviews from serious and casual golfers alike. Then came the Palms in 1989, with its wide-open design and multi-tiered greens to test a golfer's skill and patience. By the time play began on the Links in 1990, Rotonda Golf & Country Club already had a reputation for fine golf.

How the courses play, by Chris Baker:

Rotonda golf and country club consists of 3 good quality courses. They are the Hills, the Palms and the Links. There is another addition coming in January of next year which designed by the same person who created Long Marsh Golf Course.

The Palms is the longest and most challenging of the three, incorporating tight fairways with many water hazards and very tough, fast greens. Almost every hole has some sort of water feature making shot selection essential. The two holes which stand out are the sixth and the seventh. They are both short par fours which can be reached in one with the longer, more accurate hitters but beware that there are many dangers for those who don't hit the green.

The links is a municipal course with a par of 63. It doesn't have any par fives and only a handful of par fours but don't let that fool you because this course plays harder than it looks. A very tight course which requires strategic iron play to set up birdie chances.

The Hills is the most forgiving of the three courses with wide fairways and relatively easy greens in most cases but as with the others, there is still a lot of trouble for those who don't manage to keep shots in play.
